Dear [REDACTED]

It won't be necessary for you to voucher the out of pocket expenses for your recent efforts on our behalf. Arrangements have been made to send you a check in the amount of $50.00, which I trust will cover the incidental outlay you were forced to make. The check will be mailed to your home address in the near future.

I am still deeply indebted to you for the time and effort you and your staff expended in this matter. While I share your disappointment that conditions beyond your control prevented a complete job, the report was most helpful to us. Please let me know if there were any expenses to the company or to others in connection with this matter. I would like to be sure that we have covered everything before we consider the item closed.

I am very interested in discussing any leads or suggestions you may have on the subject. Perhaps you could drop in on your next trip to Washington and we will sit down and discuss it. On the other hand, I plan to be in [REDACTED] from time to time, and should I not hear from you before my next trip, I shall call you upon arrival and we can arrange a suitable time for a chat.

Thank you again for interrupting your vacation to help us on this project. Please extend my appreciation to your staff also, for their most conscientious effort on our behalf.

Cordially yours,
